Backing Jewish Wish For Explicit Exoneration In Death Of Christ, Bnai Brith Supplies All Council Fathers With Study Of U.S. Catholic Anti-Semitism; Many Want To Absolve All Jews; Hostility Centers In Curia

The Second Vatican (Ecumenical) Council declaration on the Jews, prepared by the Secretariat to Promote Christian Unity and theological commission, less forceful than the one that was to be presented to the Council Fathers last year, does not explicitly exonerate the Jews from blame in the death of Christ, says Sanche de Gramont, of the New York Herald Tribune, writing from Vatican City. Instead, it states that Jews of today should not be blamed for what was done in the past.

Many Council Fathers, however, including a majority of the American episcopate, want a stronger statement which would absolve the Jews of all traces of collective guilt.

After the meeting at which a majority of American bishops agreed to act jointly for a stronger declaration on the Jews, Richard Cardinal Cushing, Archbishop of Boston, was heard commenting to a group of bishops:

"I don't know about you guys, but I'm going to speak on both of 'em (the declaration on the Jews and the one on religious liberty)."

Cardinal Cushing is making it clear that these two declarations constitute his principal interest in this session of the Council. Elmer Cardinal Ritter, of St. Louis, is also expected to speak on the Jewish declaration. He said upon arriving in Rome that he hoped the Council would come out with a declaration that would satisfy Jews.

All the Council Fathers received copies of a study on anti-Jewish prejudice among Catholics sponsored by the Anti-Defamation League of Bnai Brith. The study was distributed to the Fathers by the Dutch documentation center for the Council.

Dr. Joseph L. Lichten, head of the Bnai Brith Inter-Cultural Affairs Department, said the study shows that "there remains a significant minority of American Catholics who reveal prejudice against the Jews," reports the New York Herald Tribune. The study traces part of the anti-Semitism to the "possible unintended effect the Crucifixion story may have on the attitudes of many church members toward the Jews."

On the basis of questionnaires filled by 845 Catholics, the study makes these findings:

Sixty-one per cent named the Jews as the group most responsible for crucifying Christ; forty-six per cent agreed because "a group of powerful Jews wanted him dead."

Forty-two per cent agreed the Jews "were deceived by wicked priests who feared Christ; 39 per cent agreed the Jews rejected Christ because "they couldn't accept a messiah who came from humble beginnings," and sixteen per cent held that the Jews rejected Christ because "they were sinful and had turned against God."

This belief in the Jews' guilt in ancient times is thought by many to extend to modern Jews.

In replies to the questionnaire, forty-six per cent agreed with or were uncertain about the statement that "the Jews can never be forgiven for what they did to Jesus until they accept him as the true Saviour."

These beliefs predispose a number of Catholics to accept an unfavorable stereotype of the Jew, the study said. Thus, fifty-five per cent agreed that "international banking tends to be dominated by Jews; twenty per cent agreed that "Jews are more likely than Christians to cheat in business" and twenty-one per cent agreed that "Jews are less likely than Christians to oppose Communism."

The study also found that the more active a Catholic is, the more he tends to view Jews in an unfavorable light.

"The primary reason for these differences," it said, "seems to lie in the concept of Catholicism as the one true faith, and Catholics as God's chosen people of today. The more active Catholics were much more likely to hold such beliefs. Catholics who saw themselves as members of the only legitimate religion were highly predisposed to anti-Semitism."

Nearly forty per cent of such Catholics blamed the Jews of today for the Crucifixion, the study said. The study concluded that perhaps five million out of 44,874,371 American Catholics are prejudiced against the Jews because they consider them deicides, says the New York Herald Tribune. The feeling among Jewish groups is that a strong statement in the Council clearing the Jews of blame for Christ's death would be helpful to dispel this kind of prejudice.

There is considerable dissatisfaction over the declaration as it now stands.

First, because the phrasing seems to imply that passing modern Jews of blame for the death of Christ is a favor to them, rather than a statement of fact. Second, because it appears to spare Christ because "a group of powerful Jews wanted him dead."

Third, because the declaration is more favorable to their conversion. As one Jewish leader put it, Jews are extremely sensitive to efforts to convert them. They have a "historic memory" which leads them to recall the many efforts in the past to force their conversion.

Second, the declaration as it now stands seems to say in effect: modern Jews are no longer guilty, but their ancestors were.

One Council Father told a Jewish leader that the sentence in the present declaration clearing the Jews of today was enough because "you could build a beautiful theology on that." But others feel that what is needed is a lucid statement today rather than a cornerstone for future theological interpretation.

One encouraging sign is the large number of written amendments to the present declaration the Secretariat to Promote Christian Unity has received. A recent visitor to the Secretariat reported seeing foot-high piles of amendments, reports the New York Herald Tribune. Many of these reportedly urge a stronger statement.

It is therefore expected that Augustin Cardinal Bea, head of the Secretariat, will propose certain amendments for inclusion in the declaration.

His support will come from the "progressive" Fathers and from the American hierarchy. All but one of the five American Cardinals are said to support actively a stronger declaration.

The exception is James Francis Cardinal McIntyre, of Los Angeles, who once declined to sign a petition condemning anti-Semitism in the Soviet Union on the grounds that his anti-Communist views were already well enough known.

The hostility to a stronger declaration is said to center in the Vatican Curia, many of whose members are described as being against almost every form of change. They see no good reason to clear the Jews in the death of Christ, and point to passages in the New Testament describing the Jews as a cursed race.

The statement on the Jews was a chapter in the schema (project) on ecumenism last year, but then it was redrafted and appended to the chapter as a declaration. Council experts said this was in no way a downgrading of the text, however.

Since the text on the Jews represents an attitude of the Church, rather than a doctrinal change, it is better suited to a declaration than to a decree, which becomes legally binding. A declaration is more a statement of principle, says the New York Herald Tribune. But as another expert said: "This declaration will get the full treatment of debate — and what is more important than whether it is a declaration or a decree is how overwhelming the vote is."

Chagall At Seventy-Seven Executes Glass Windows Commissioned By U.N., And By France; Creates Another For Rockefellers

A small gothic church of native stone and timber at Pocantico Hills, N.Y., installed a large leaded glass window by Marc Chagall, to create a cyclone of color over the pews and pulpit where a dull amber glow had previously been cast by old-fashioned diamond-shaped panes.

It is the Union Church, a non-denominational Protestant place of worship across Bedford Road from the entrance to the estate of the Rockefeller family, says the New York Times. The church is financed partly by the Rockefellers, who own most of Pocantico Hills.

The Chagall window is a memorial to John D. Rockefeller Jr., given by his children, his widow, his grandchildren and other relatives.

"I like the window very much," said the Rev. Marshall L. Smith, minister of the church, as he examined its dominant bright blues and greens and accents of yellows, oranges and reds.

He added: "I intend to tell everybody who wants to see it that the best time for inspections is at 11 A.M. on Sundays — when Sabbath services begin.

The theme of the window is the story of the Good Samaritan, taken by Chagall from the Gospel of Luke. Christ is portrayed as a child, a youth and a man, with the Samaritan and on the cross.

A dozen other faces also are shown, along with what might be a horse or a lamb, and great splashes of blue as symbols of peace. Most of the secondary symbolism is presented gently and [illegible] preachers who must hold the worshippers' attention, the window is behind the pews. It cannot be seen when the parishioners' faces are turned toward the pulpit.

Over the pulpit is a moderately simple green rose window by Henri Matisse, which parishioners interpret variously as portraying icebergs, cows, or the Northern Lights. They are not prone to study it extensively during sermons.

The Matisse creation is the Abby Aldrich Rockefeller Memorial window, given by the family in 1954 as a memorial to Mrs. John D. Rockefeller Jr., mother of Governor Rockefeller and his four brothers and one sister, says the New York Times. It was the last work of Matisse before he died on November 3, 1954.

The Chagall window is fifteen feet high and nine feet wide. The idea for it arose in 1961 at the Louvre in Paris. David Rockefeller, a son of John D. Rockefeller Jr., and his wife saw the Jerusalem windows that Chagall had made.

The family accepted David Rockefeller's suggestion that Chagall be asked to create the larger memorial window. The artist visited the church before drawing the window's design. The workshop of Jacques Simon of Paris produced the window, and the Lamb Studios of Tenafly, N.J., installed it.

September was a big month for Marc Chagall. The old master of modern art directed the installation of two other major new works and attended their festive unveilings. Then, because a man of seventy-seven has no time for rest, he will open his sketchbooks and strike out into a new medium.

The Russian-born French painter went to New York to supervise the setting into place of his group of stained-glass windows dedicated to the memory of Dag Hammarskjold and others described as those "who have fallen and are still falling" for the cause of peace. The windows were dedicated at the United Nations.

Less than a week later, at a gala at the Paris Opera, a large new ceiling by Chagall was unveiled. The stage work that night took second place in the attention of the audience. It was Ravel's ballet "Daphnis et Chloe" with sets and costumes by a Chagall of an earlier period.

After his night at the Opera, Chagall withdrew to his house at Vence, in the hills behind Nice, to start sketching decors and costumes for Mozart's "Magic Flute." This, the artist's first venture into opera, was recently commissioned by Rudolph Bing for the new Metropolitan at the Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts, in New York.

"I'll do it if I have the strength," Chagall said to Merrill Folsom of the New York Times, in his walk-up apartment on the third floor of a fine old building on the Ile Saint-Louis, the most ancient part of Paris. The eagerness in his voice and the spark in his eyes belied the caution of his words.

What appears to give him real hesitation in undertaking the Met's commission is the fate of the last state décors he did in New York. That was during the war, when Chagall was a refugee in the United States.

"I did two ballets there," he said in his pleasantly Russian-accented French, "'Aleko' for the Ballet Theater and 'The Firebird' for George Balanchine. Most of the sets and costumes are prob-

Banker Was Head Of House Of Zilkha Founded With $250 In 1899

Maurice K. Zilkha, a member of the House of Zilkha, the international financing enterprise founded by his late father, Khademy Zilkha, died in New York in the Carlyle Hotel after a short illness. He was [illegible] years old.

Baghdad, Iraq, where his father with a stake of about $250 founded the family business in 1899, says the New York Times. At Mr. Zilkha's death in 1956 it was noted that the growth of the small bank into a worldwide financing empire was "probably unmatched" since the growth of the Rothschild financial establishment.

Maurice and his three brothers, Abdulla, Ezra, and Selim, were their father's chief lieutenants in the operation of a network of nine financing and foreign-exchange enterprises covering five continents. The Middle East was Maurice's territory. He lived there for several years and served as the managing director of the Banque Zilkha in Egypt. The Egyptian holdings of the Zilkha family were confiscated in 1956 by the government of Premier Gamel Abdel Nasser.

Mr. Zilkha left Egypt and became an Italian citizen, which he was at his death. He was the acknowledged head, without holding any official post, of the Banque d'Arbitrage et de Credit; the Societe de Participations Industrielles du Sud-Est, a holding company; and of an automobile financing company, Union Francaise pour la Vente, all with headquarters in Paris.

He maintained homes in the French capital, as well as in Vaud-Mont-Sur-Rolle, Switzerland. He also was board chairman of Zilkha & Sons, Inc., 120 Broadway, a financial and investment house, and a director of Eurobank, Brussels, an equipment-leasing concern.

As a young man Maurice Zilkha attended two English schools, Southport and Hor Bay Colleges. A fluent linguist, he spoke Arabic, French, Italian and English. He was also a proficient sportsman and a low-handicap golfer.

He also was a member of the Bashi family, a well-known financial family that also originated in Baghdad. His mother, Mrs. Louise Zilkha, was a Bashi before her marriage.

The two families were closely affiliated in business operation. The enterprises' banner of success was a motto adopted by the elder Zilkha — to be ready to lend the right money to the right man at the right time.

From the modest beginnings in Baghdad the Zilkhas opened another bank in 1927 in Beirut, Lebanon; others in Damascus, Syria; Cairo, and Alexandria, before turning to the U.S. in 1941.

Surviving Mr. Zilkha besides his mother and three brothers are his widow, Mrs. Helene Paraskevaidias Zilkha; a daughter, Doris, of Paris; and Vaud-Mont-Sur-Rolle; a son, Philippe; and two sisters, Mrs. Helen Simon, and Mrs. Hanina Shasha, both of New York.

A funeral service was held at the Riverside Memorial Chapel, Amsterdam Avenue and 76th Street, New York.

Says 6,000 Arab Students In U.S. Incite Against Israel

The head of the American-Israel Public Affairs Committee charged that 6,000 Arab students on American campuses were "trying to influence the minds of professors and fellow students" against Israel.

Rabbi Philip S. Bernstein, chairman of the Committee, which has headquarters in Washington, also charged that Arab and other propaganda agencies in the U.S. have spent $1.75 million on anti-Israel propaganda, says the New York Times, "among all segments of the American people including on university campuses."

Dr. Bernstein, who was a former adviser on Jewish affairs to United States Army commanders in Europe, spoke at the annual installation meeting of Bnai Zion, American Zionist fraternal group, at the New York Hilton Hotel.

A citation was presented to him testifying to the planting of a grove of 1,000 trees in his name in Israel in recognition of his services "to Israel and to the welfare of the Jewish people." The presentation was made by Dr. Harris J. Levine, honorary president of the Jewish National Fund of America. The meeting also marked the installation of Edward Sharf, New York lawyer, as president of Bnai Zion.

In his address, Dr. Bernstein said that the Arab Information Center had regional offices throughout the U.S. providing "lectures to service organizations, women's clubs, church forums," in attempts to incite anti-Israel feelings. Last year, he added, the Arab group "spent $186,000, per-[illegible] it has [illegible]

Rabbi Bernstein also said that the American Friends of the Middle East, "working in business circles, on the campuses of the country, in Washington, provides Arab students for indoctrination in the colleges and universities of the land." Its philosophy, he said, is "anti-Israel and pro-Nasser."

In contrast to the heavy expenditures by those engaged in anti-Israel propaganda, Rabbi Bernstein said his committee spent only $146,000 to "disseminate factual information on events in Israel and the Middle East."

He declared that "all too often Jewish students don't know the answers to what these well-informed enemies of Israel are saying." Rabbi Bernstein charged that tours were being sponsored, says the New York Times, for "Christian professors and students to

He inspired and persuaded countless people and numerous organizations to become associated with this humanitarian cause. ★ ZIONIST ORGANIZATION ★

Of Canada will hold its 37th national convention on October 24-27, at the Queen Elizabeth Hotel, in Montreal. Guest speakers will be: Dr. Nahum Goldmann, president, World Zionist Organization; the Hon. Paul Martin, Secretary of State for External Affairs; and Israel Ambassador to Canada, Gershon Avner. The central theme is "The Zionist Role In A Changing World." More than 800 delegates and observers from all parts of the country will attend. Dr. Goldmann will speak at the president's dinner on October 25. Mr. Martin will be the guest of honour at the public relations dinner on October 26. The presiding chairman will be Dean Maxwell Cohen, Q.C., Faculty of Law, McGill University. Ambassador Gershon Avner will speak at the opening session on October 24. Joseph N. Frank is president, Charles Wolfson, Q.C., convention chairman. The convention will hold a day-long ideological conference on October 26. The background to the discussions is the thesis set forth by Moshe Sharett, chairman of the Jewish Agency, at the recent Actions Committee Conference in Jerusalem in which he delineated a challenging new role for the Zionist Movement. He said that the fundamental aim of Zionism as an ideology was the survival of Judaism and the Jewish People. The State of Israel, he said, was one of the means to achieve these aims. But it was not the primary purpose of Zionism. Mr. Sharett asserted that Aliyah (immigration) on a large scale from many countries of the world, especially the main centres of Jewry in the Western world, is not to be expected. Only greater Zionist efforts would bring about a change in the situation. He also referred to the need to abolish parties from the Zionist Movement, asserting that the proliferation of politically-oriented groups hindered the work of the Movement. The convention will deal with the problems of Zionism in a Canadian context, including the aims of the Movement; the organization; future directions. The two-part session will be linked with the president's luncheon at which Mr. Frank will present his report. The convention will focus on problems of Israel; the plight of Russian Jewry; anti-Semitism in Argentina and other countries. In addition to Mr. Frank and Mr. Wolfson, members of the national convention committee are: Mrs. Samuel Borod, Harry Bershaw, Jack Breslow, Leonard Cordes, Nathan Galsin, Mrs. Ben Morris, Mrs. Anne Raginsky, Ben Rubinstein, Lou. YESHIVA U. LAUNCHED NATIONAL DRIVE FOR $15 MILLION SCIENCE PROGRAM

Yeshiva University announced plans for a $15,000,000 science development program which will include the construction of a 15-story building at its Main Center in the Washington Heights section of Manhattan. Dr. Samuel Belkin, president of America's oldest and largest University under Jewish auspices, in making the announcement, stated that the development program calls for:

The erection of a 15-story science building which will house the University's Belfer Graduate School of Science and its entire teaching and research facilities; An expansion of the teaching and research programs of the Belfer Graduate School of Science and increases in student enrollments and faculty; the school presently has 200 full-time students and 25 faculty; The introduction of new programs in chemistry, computation, biophysics and astrophysics.

The Belfer Graduate School of Science offers mathematics and physics leading to the Master of Science, Master of Arts, and Doctor of Philosophy degrees. The Science Center development program was launched at a national dinner at the Hotel Waldorf-Astoria, in New York.

Dr. Belkin stated that the Science Development program is being undertaken to meet the challenges confronting higher education, including the pressures to train vitally needed specialists. The new Science Center will allow an increase in facilities and teaching staffs to enable the University to meet the expected tripling of college enrollments by 1970 and to develop new programs. The new Yeshiva University Science Center will stimulate the research and educational activities of the metropolitan area. It would enable scientists in this area to have a "center of excellence" for the continuation of study and research for the betterment of all mankind, Dr. Belkin said.

The Science Center building program is designed to meet the serious shortage of the nation's most precious commodity, talent. According to a new study issued recently by the National Science Foundation, "Fewer than 765,000 newly-trained scientists and engineers will become available to fill more than one million openings for them between 1960 and 1970."

The estimate is based on the assumption that the economy will continue to grow rapidly, that the space program will be kept moving steadily, and that the price tag on national defense will remain high. The report pointed out that the sciences that need the most help because of their rapid growth, astronomy, physics, chemistry, medicine, biology, mathematics, will be severely shorthanded.

If the demands aren't met, the report states, then the ambitions of universities, industry, and government will have to be adjusted downward. Some programs will have to be put off or cancelled, others will be carried out only with difficulty, less efficiently, or over a longer period than anticipated. "There are surely enough young intelligent men and women in the U.S. who could be trained to fill the gaps. A beginning must be made by increasing facilities to produce the M.A.'s and the Ph.D.'s that the U.S. requires," Dr. Belkin said.

Approximately 70,000 square feet will be devoted to experimental or laboratory usage, and another 40,000 square feet for office-seminar rooms. A typical floor will have an experimental laboratory area of 5,000 square feet; a division of the space will depend on the nature of the research project. There will be at least eleven floors with similar arrangements.

The theoretical phase of the research and study will occur in individual rooms of 250 square feet which will serve as a faculty office and as a seminar room for the special students assigned to work with him. A typical floor of the new Science Center will contain two blocks of these rooms.

Some floors will contain a lecture hall two floors in height with tiered seats for 144; on other floors there will be reading and study rooms. A 300-seat auditorium will be situated on the main entrance level. The Science Center will locate its experimental areas which require special shielding two floors below street level. A cafeteria and a roof terrace will also be part of the Science Center building.

The construction of the new Science Center is part of Yeshiva University's "Blueprint for the Sixties," a ten-year, $30 million development program initiated in 1961 on the 75th anniversary. Phase A of this comprehensive expansion was the construction of a new classroom - administration building, Furst Hall, which was completed in September, 1963. A new eight-story residence hall was readied for student occupancy this fall. A central University Library and the teaching and research Science Center round out the initial portion of this dynamic project.

Phase B calls for the erection of a gymnasium-recreation hall, a classroom building and residence hall for Stern College for Women and the Teachers Institute for Women, and facilities for other graduate schools.

The Belfer Graduate School of Science, housed at 601 West 168th Street, Manhattan, was founded in 1958 to help meet the continuing and increasing need for scientists, research scholars, and science educators. The School's achievements and standards, to a major extent, are due to its outstanding faculty. Under the direction of Dr. Abe Gelbart, Dean, who was formerly with the Institute for Advanced Study, in Princeton, N.J., and Syracuse University, the School has attracted to its faculty a number of world-renowned scientists. Many of the faculty and visiting lecturers have been recipients of numerous awards, grants, and contracts from the Federal Government for the support of the theoretical and experimental research.

Among the sponsoring Governmental agencies have been: the U.S. Air Force: for work in plasma research; research in statistical mechanics; research in symbolic logic; National Science Foundation: for work in differential geometry; study dealing with the basic aspects of the quantum theory; study of elementary particles; national aeronautics and space administration: for basic research in astrophysics such as studies to determine the mass of the Milky Way.

As part of its program to expand and raise the level of science education in the secondary schools, the Belfer Graduate School of Science has conducted for several years, under a grant from the National Science Foundation, an In-service Institute in Science and Mathematics for secondary school teachers. It is named for Arthur B. Belfer, president of the Belco Petroleum Corp., who contributed $2,000,000 to the institution in 1962.

It has a Science Advisory Council to assist in its academic development. Among its members are: Dr. Willis E. Lamb, Jr., Nobel Laureate Professor of Physics at Yale University; Dr. Karl Meyer, Professor of Biochemistry at Columbia University; Dr. Deane Montgomery, Professor at the Institute for Advanced Study, at Princeton, N.J.; Dr. Abraham Pais, nuclear physicist and professor at the Rockefeller Institute; Dr. Atle Selberg, Professor at the Institute for Advanced Study, Princeton, N.J., and Dr. Herbert Katzin, director, Eye Bank Research Laboratory, New York.

The Belfer Graduate School of Science is an integral division of Yeshiva University, now in its 78th year. The University provides undergraduate, graduate, and professional studies in the arts, sciences, and Jewish learning leading to 18 different degrees and diplomas for more than 5,500 men and women. In addition to the extensive academic programs, it conducts a network of community service agencies, wide-ranging research projects, and publishes several scholarly journals.

Yeshiva University's Main Center is at Amsterdam Avenue and 186th Street, in Manhattan's Washington Heights, with three other major teaching centers in mid-Manhattan and the Bronx.

The Sermon: Something Like The Israelites

By the Very Reverend Francis B. Sayre, Dean of Washington Episcopal Cathedral; grandson of Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States

When it comes to those larger affairs of our nation's destiny or the rivalries of whole races of men, and peoples, and ideologies; then it's ever so much harder to see the cross that God places in the midst of the welter, much less the resurrection by which He redeems the affairs of men, and by massive forgiveness enables us to endure and even to be free.

Is, then, the scale of God so small — the power of the Almighty so confined — that we must fail to see Him standing out there in the larger affairs of life, at the crossroads, shall we say, of each election, at the bar of every parliament, upon the border of every headline-spawning conflict, His hand still outstretched, His pity at our self-imprisonment, and His proffer of the springs of life if only we will shift our gaze, and stretch our wings toward Him.

I suppect that thousands, even millions, of our countrymen this summer, viewing the extravaganzas that were produced at the Cow Palace in San Francisco and at Convention Hall at Atlantic City, felt something like the Israelites must have felt when finally they were thrust into exile. The Book of Chronicles — we read it this morning — records that the last of their kings hardened his heart against God, that the messengers of God were shocked, that the people were carried off into Babylon.

Likewise, exactly likewise, this summer, we beheld a pair of gathering at the summit of political power, each of which was completely dominated by a single man — the one, a man of dangerous ignorance and devastating uncertainty; the other, a man whose public house is splendid in its every appearance, but whose private lack of ethic must inevitably introduce termites at the very foundation.

The electorate of this mighty nation is left homeless, then, by such a pair of nominees. It knows not where to turn.

Our people are in a great dilemma, and there is no corner of the country which you may visit today where you do not feel this profoundly. We stare fascinated at the forces that have produced such a sterile choice for us: frustration and a federation of hostilities in one party; and, in the other, behind a goodly facade, only a cynical manipulation of power.

There is at this moment a widespread sense of rootless exile among our people. God may yet have his place at the hearth of each man's home, but it's awfully hard to discern his grace in the public life.

And yet, in the end, this is not the fault of any of our so-called leaders, for they but only reflect what they so cannily perceive to be the preoccupation of every single one of us. Few eyes are lifted in this nation to a nobler purpose than selfish gain. Little trust is there among our people that friendship with other nations can be won by another means than force.

The easy way out: the simplicity of a solution to a complex problem; the unwillingness to be disturbed by taxes, or regulation, or any change of way — this is the blinded credo of a people who are tired of marching, tired of flying, if you will, like the bird, even though to stay motionless surely means death.

'Tis a fever, this, which afflicts us all, a dread sickness to which we have become so accustomed that we call it normal. Little wonder that the political parties of our society reflect the emptiness of our faith, and the tinsel baubles by which we forever seek to disguise that lack of faith.

Who, then, remains to bear witness to the wondrous power and Mercy of God, as potent for a whole people as for a single individual? Well, who but we, ourselves, to whom it has been given to see that yonder dimension, to see it in terms not of the Bible alone, but of our every walk of life, of each day that we exist and each thought that we lay before Him, and of our discernment of his healing will for all of mankind, that it should be free from the deadly snake; free to soar newborn each day in the sunshine of freedom and of truth.

"He touched her hand, and the fever left her, and she arose and ministered to Him." An invisible strength to break an equally invisible bond — this is the movement, the gesture of freedom, the reaching out of a hand that is God's to make and not ours. And it is God's incarnation in all the affairs of man.

How shall we bear witness to that — in the church and out, on Sunday and on every other day, as we go to the polls and as we stay home? This is the responsibility that God lays before every one of us this day and in the next two months.

Resolution Of Labor Zionist Organization Of America Endorsing Johnson Unanimously

Since its founding sixty years ago, the Labor Zionist Organization of America-Poale Zion, motivated by its commitment to the highest ideals and aspirations of American democracy and the ethical traditions of Judaism, has pursued a policy of endorsing liberal candidates for national office as part of its program of political activity and communal affairs. In keeping with this policy, the Central Committee of the LZOA-Poale Zion endorses the candidacy of President Lyndon B. Johnson and Senator Hubert H. Humphrey for President and Vice President of the United States.

An objective examination of the records and platforms on which the major candidates are running leads to the conclusion that Johnson and Humphrey represent the best traditions and hopes of American democracy. The Civil Rights Act of 1964, the test-ban treaty, the Peace Corps, the anti-poverty project, and the Medicare plan are major examples of a program of broad vision and practical accomplishment which must be reaffirmed and continued by the American people.

Grave problems of inequality, oppression, and economic and social dislocation still face this country; their solution will require inspired leadership and enlightened citizen participation. The program initiated by the late President Kennedy and effectively advanced by President Johnson in the White House and his running mate in the Senate constitutes an important beginning and a liberal renascence which we warmly endorse.

Of special interest to us are the stands of the candidates on the role of the United States on the world scene. We support the positions of Johnson and Humphrey calling for the liberalization of American immigration laws and the elimination of the existing quota system of admission to this country which is based on racist concepts. Although we may not agree with all aspects of American foreign policy, we approve the general direction of opposing Communist expansion while encouraging the independence of new and small nations, the spread of democracy, the advancement of economic cooperation and free trade, the promotion of cultural exchange, the implementation of controlled multilateral disarmament, and the strengthening of the United Nations.

We welcome the indications of enhanced cooperation between the United States and Israel as manifested during the visit of the Prime Minister of Israel at the official invitation of President Johnson, and the Administration's support of Israel's program for the peaceful development of its precious water resources. We look forward to intensified efforts on the part of our government to deter the threat of Arab aggression and secure peace in the Middle East.

The LZOA-Poale Zion is alarmed by the destructive positions taken by Senator Barry Goldwater and Representative William E. Miller on minorities, immigration, labor and social welfare. We condemn their equivocation on the Ku Klux Klan and their courting of the votes of racial bigots and extremist groups. We denounce their reckless approach to the problem of controlling and reducing the danger of nuclear war.

We call upon our members and friends to oppose these reactionary manifestations in the public life of our country and to work actively for the election of Lyndon B. Johnson and Hubert H. Humphrey as President and Vice-President of the United States.

CHAGALL AT SEVENTY-SEVEN DONATES GLASS WINDOWS

ably rotting in someone's cellar now. Except for the 'Aléko' décors. You know where they are?"

A look of hurt crossed Chagall's gay face, and his voice dropped. "They are in the Four Seasons Restaurant," he said. "A restaurant!"

He shook his head as if to chase an ugly thought, then took a more positive view of New York in telling of his enthusiasm for Mozart in general and "The Magic Flute" in particular. "But it will be long and hard work," he said unhappily.

The two Chagalls that were given to the public were commissioned, one by the United Nations, the other by France, says the New York Times. Both were freely donated by the artist.

"When one government asks another for something, it pays. But I am not a government; I am Chagall. I have given them as I did the windows for Metz cathedral and for Jerusalem — because I love France, I love humanity, I love good people. I am happy that I have done my duty."
